

Identifying a small daffodil

Author : Ross Hornsby, Alabama

Categories : Daffodil Types, General, Species

Date : April 8, 2019

I'm hoping for help in identifying this small daffodil. It blooms 1-2 weeks earlier than my N. jonquilla var. henriquesii and about 4 weeks before my late blooming N. jonquilla. The flowers are slightly smaller and more delicate than my other jonquillas, and I've never seen them except as one flower per stem. The foliage is finer, more straight and upright, almost like pine needles. They're powerfully fragrant. I have it in a pot now but I dug it out of one of my daffodil beds. In 2007, I bought bulbs from bulbmeister.com and lost track of them, thinking they had died, but perhaps this daffodil is one of them that survived. The bulbs I bought from bulbmeister.com were labeled as N. assoanus ssp. requienii and N. willkommii. Could it be one of these, or another form of N. jonquilla, or something else?

Unidentified small daffodil