

Is this 'Pueblo'?

Author : Ross Hornsby, Alabama

Categories : Daffodil Types

Date : December 9, 2019

I have an unidentified daffodil in my garden in a weedy place where I've never planted any daffodils. I don't remember noticing it until this year, but it had many flowering stems and was very vigorous. From this photo taken March 13, you can see it's mostly white, although the flowers open yellowish. I believe it is a Jonquilla hybrid, and it appears to be fertile, as nearly every flower produced a seed pod full of seeds (some of which I've germinated this fall).

It's nearby where I typically do repotting. I had 'Pueblo' and 'Nancegollan' in a few of these pots. Also I had 'Sweetness', 'Trevithian', and various different kinds of N. jonquilla. Further across the yard I have 'Hillstar', 'Sweet Love', 'Sailboat', and 'Bell Song'. These are the only Jonquillas I had on hand. Since it looks sort of like 'Pueblo', I'm wondering if a stray bulb of it washed there, or if it could be from a seed or a sport of something else. 'Pueblo' and my other white Jonquillas have never been vigorous for me, though, nor produced any seeds.

Unidentified daffodil